

Permission to See My Health Records through a Health Information Exchange (HIE)

UNM Health providers can use electronic databases called Health Information Exchanges (HIEs). These HIEs share health care information between different organizations or providers. Sharing information helps everyone to manage patient care better. This means my UNM Health providers may get some of my health information from outside UNM.

The health care information might include sensitive information like:

- sexually transmitted infections (STIs) or HIV testing information
- genetic information or genetic test results
- mental health information
- developmental disability information

I do want my UNM Health providers to get health information through HIEs, to help give me better care, any time I receive care.

I do not want my UNM Health providers to get health information through HIEs. I have been given information on how to make sure my choice gets entered into HIE systems.
